

Lettuce

Lettuce is 95% water and is rich in Vitamin A. This means it can help you stay hydrated and it's good for your eyes!

Environmental Impact: Low

Tomato

Tomatoes are packed with Vitamin C and potassium which are both important to keeping you healthy

Environmental Impact: Low

Chicken

Chicken is a good source of protein and can be used in sandwiches, wraps or pasta!

Environmental Impact: Medium

Whole Wheat Bread

Whole wheat bread is very versatile and has a lot of fiber. Fiber helps keep your digestive system and your heart healthy.

Environmental Impact: Low

Potato

Potatoes can be mashed, baked, or even grilled. They are rich in fiber and potassium which is good for your digestive system and heart.

Environmental Impact: Low

Fish

Provides good vitamins and nutrients to help boost the immune system and enhance brain development

Environmental Impact: Low

Egg

Eggs are great for your eyesight and a great source of protein. Eat these in the morning to get a good use of energy!

Environmental Impact: Medium

Steak

Beef is high in protein that helps build muscle and grow strong bones. It is also high in zinc that supports your metabolism and digestion

Environmental Impact: High

Oatmeal

Oatmeal is a great source of fiber and helps get your brain moving early in the day.

Environmental Impact:

Medium

Apples

Apples are made up of about 86% of water and have lots of good vitamins to improve brain power and digestion

Environmental Impact:

Low

Meatballs

Meatballs are a good source of protein which is essential in building your immune system. Including protein in your diet can help create a balanced diet. Environmental Impact: High

Broccoli

Broccoli has a lot of Vitamin C which is very good for your skin protection and helps heal wounds. Environmental Impact: Low

Lettuce

Lettuce is 95% water and is rich in Vitamin A. This means it can help you stay hydrated and it's good for your eyes! Environmental Impact: Low

Black Beans

Beans come in many different shapes and colors. They are a great source of vegetable protein and minerals like zinc, iron, and magnesium. Environmental Impact: Low

Avocado

Avocados have a "good" fat within them that helps lower cholesterol and are also a good source of fiber. Environmental Impact: Low

Peas

Peas are full of vitamins and minerals that help boost your immune system and helps lower the risk of heart disease. Environmental Impact: Low

Carrots

Carrots are very well known to help with eyesight and are full of good vitamins and minerals. Environmental Impact Low

Blueberries

Blueberries have lots of health benefits and Vitamin C. Environmental Impact Low

Mushroom

Mushrooms are a source of vitamin B, which is good for our energy levels and our brain function. Environmental Impact:

Low

Pasta

Pasta has lots of nutrients that provide good energy for the body to get you through the day. Environmental Impact:

Low

Tortilla

Tortillas have minerals like fiber and magnesium that help in your digestive system and improve brain, heart, and muscle function. Environmental Impact:

Medium

Lentils

Lentils are a type of plant protein that serve as much as some meat products. They have potassium and fiber that can help with stomach issues. Environmental Impact:

Low