

Trans Day of Visibility

with Skylar Kergil

Skylar Kergil is a transgender singer-songwriter, activist, educator, writer and artist from Acton, MA, currently residing in Boston, MA. After high school, he attended Skidmore College, serving on the board of the Pride Alliance, as a Peer Mentor, and an active member of the community until graduating on May 18, 2013, with honors and leadership awards.

Most often known on the internet as his pseudonym “Skylark” or “Skylarkeleven,” he began documenting his transition on YouTube in 2009 when he began hormone therapy. Being transgender is not the only identity Skylar assumes, but it has been one that has formed his passions around LGBT rights and advocacy for the community. Because of his YouTube vlogs and written blogs, he has been invited to speak internationally on college and high school campuses. In Fall of 2012, he was a speaker at the College of St. Rose in Albany, NY, which led him to become the keynote speaker at the 4th largest national Breaking the Silence Rally sponsored by GLSEN in April of 2013. He has also presented at colleges nationwide and The American College Health Association annual conference among others. In 2017, he published his first book about his transition through high school and college: Before I Had the Words: On Being a Transgender Young Adult. As of now, he is traveling to educate and working on his music.
